

From Emperor to Suppliant? The Future of the US Economy in the New International Environment.

In this presentation I discuss what the US economy needs to do to survive and thrive in the newly transformed international economy and how it might successfully adapt to the realities of a multipolar economic world.

Grahame Thompson has spent most of his academic career at the Open University. He trained as an economist and was originally a member of the Economics Department. He moved to Government and Politics (later POLIS) in 2000 and served as Head of Department from 2001 to 2003 and for 2007. He is co-author of Globalization in Question: The International Economy and the Possibilities of Governance