Center for the Study of the Americas

Annual Report, 2008

In its fifth year of existence, the Center for the Study of the Americas further solidified its position as a hub for research and debate on the Americas. As in previous years, we attempted to strike a balance between strengthening our own research activities, expanding our international network, providing an inspiring environment for American Studies students at CBS, and public outreach.

Research and international networks

Among the new research projects begun in 2008 was "Transatlantic Perceptions," which was launched by Edward Ashbee with a conference in February supported by FUHU. Whereas much attention has been given to European perceptions of America, the project will add balance by promoting research in American perceptions of Europe and their implications for transatlantic cooperation. In addition to researchers from CSA, the seminar had international speakers and speakers from other Danish universities. An older center project, Projections of Power, which had been put on hold for a while due to other engagements, was resumed by Niels Bjerre-Poulsen and other center staff in the autumn and is now nearing its completion. It will result in an anthology with 10 contributions from center staff as well as from overseas scholars. Also in 2008 Helene Balslev Clausen and Jan Gustafsson became coordinators of a project on migration and tourism. The project investigates the impact of migration and tourism in northern Mexico and southern Spain on existing sociocultural, political and economic processes. The project runs for two years and is supported by CONACYT (the Mexican research council) and the European Union.

Center participation in national and international networks continues to expand. Thus, for example, Jan Gustafsson became involved in a new Danish network focusing on research on Latinos in the USA and transnationalism. It has received funding from the Danish Research Council for the Humanities for two years and is in the process of planning and carrying out a series of activities. Edward Ashbee was approached by the Center for the Study of the Americas at the University of Graz to explore possibilities for cooperation. In July Edward Ashbee taught at their Summer School in American studies. Subsequently, the University of Graz has contacted CBS with a view to creating an Erasmus exchange programme.

Public outreach

Our public outreach was as extensive in 2008 as the year before – 14 lectures, seminars and conferences hosted at CBS as well as media appearances and lectures by center staff across Denmark and abroad. It is evident that the center's activities have the attention of a large group of researchers, journalists, and other people with an interest in the Americas. A full list of the events hosted by the Center in 2008 is attached to this report, while a few of them may be mentioned here.

Our first Fulbright Professor Richard Millett, from the University of Southern Illinois at Edwardsville, was the driving force behind an international conference in the spring on "Latin America and Globalization – views from The Americas and Europe". The conference had prominent invited speakers from Nicaragua, Guatemala, Panama, Paraguay, Mexico, the United States, Germany, Sweden, The Netherlands, Great Britain, and Denmark. The conference attracted a large audience and contributed towards making the Center known internationally, through the very favourable impression made by the center on the visiting scholars.

Also in the spring the Center co-hosted a three-day event on contemporary Latin American politics, "From the Left Turn to the Decolonial Option: Conceptualizing Latin America", with the University of Roskilde and the Research Center for Torture Victims. Three major Latin American scholars gave lectures and conducted workshops at the three host institutions to different audiences. At CBS the workshop resulted in lively debate about relations between Latin America and the western world. The symposium was co-funded by the Danish Research Council for Society and Business.

The tremendous public interest in the U.S. presidential election also left a clear mark on the activities of the center, especially in the autumn. Four of the center's events were directly related to the election and its aftermath. Among these events was a major conference, co-organized with the US Embassy: "Reaching for the Big Prize: The U.S. Presidential Election 2008" featuring invited Danish and American speakers and attracting a large gathering of people from both within CBS and elsewhere.

Political events in the Western Hemisphere, and particularly the presidential election in the U.S., created a heavy demand on center staff by the Danish media. As listed below members of the Center have given a large number of interviews on Danish radio and television programmes and guest lectures to a large variety of gatherings. Apart from the importance of contributing to the public debate this form of outreach has the significant effect of publicizing center expertise to a wide section of the population who might not otherwise come into contact with the research issues and results produced by the Business School.

We continue to enjoy close relations with the embassies of the Americas in Copenhagen, some of which generously supported conferences and other events at CSA in 2008. The seminar on Indigenous Peoples in the Americas in March was co-sponsored by the Canadian Embassy. The Mexican Embassy co-sponsored our conference on Latin America and Globalization and hosted a wonderful reception in the Ambassador's home. The U.S. Embassy co-sponsored the conference on the 2008 U.S. elections in the autumn. We look forward to further cooperation in the future.

The Distinguished Danish Fulbright Chair of American Studies

During the summer break, we said goodbye to Richard Millett and welcomed our second Fulbright Professor, Associate Professor Raymond Haberski from Marian College in Indiana. Professor Haberski is a historian with a special interest in American foreign relations, law, and American popular culture. He has already proven to be a real asset to the research environment at CSA, and will no doubt continue to be so in 2009.

Teaching programmes

Both the BA and the MA programmes in American Studies at CBS have been further boosted by the Fulbright Chair. The Fulbright Professors have participated fully in teaching activities and contribute towards an international and lively atmosphere in classes. In the autumn Richard Millett organised internships for several graduate students at the Council of Foreign Relations in Washington, D.C. and in Saint Louis. He also facilitated exchange stays for several students at the University of Southern Illinois at Edwardsville as well as a shorter trip for one group of students to Saint Louis and another to Puerto Rico. A growing interest in CBS American Studies among international students has also been noticeable, made possible by the fact that all the teaching in the programme is in English.

The Center's latest PhD student, Helene Balslev Clausen, completed her dissertation entitled "Juntos pero no revueltos – un estudio sobre emigrantes norte-americanos en un pueblo mexicano"; it was a study of middle class emigration from the US to Mexico. The defence was held in Spanish on March 27th.
