

About the organizers:

Pamela Mondliwa is a senior researcher at the Centre for Competition, Regulation and Economic Development (CCRED) at the University of Johannesburg. Prior to joining CCRED she worked as an economist in the policy and research division of the Competition Commission of South Africa where she conducted economic analyses on complex enforcement cases, cartels, and mergers and acquisitions. Pamela's research experience is on issues related to competition, economic regulation and access to markets; industrial development; and regional economic development. She has provided research support to various government departments in South Africa and advises competition authorities in the Southern Africa region

Stefano Ponte is professor of International Political Economy at Copenhagen Business School and the director of the Centre for Business and Development Studies. His primary interest lies in transnational economic and environmental governance, with focus on overlaps and tensions between private governance and public regulation. Stefano's research, fieldwork, teaching and policy work is informed by international political economy approaches, global value chain analysis and convention theory. His work analyzes governance dynamics and economic and environmental upgrading trajectories in global value chains — especially in developing countries and in Africa. Stefano is particularly interested in how sustainability standards, labels and certifications shape agro-food value chains, and in how different forms of partnerships affect sustainability outcomes.

John Rand is Professor (mso) of Development Economics at the Department of Economics, University of Copenhagen. He is member of Development Economics Research Group (DERG), the Copenhagen Center for Disaster Research (COPE) and non-resident research fellow at UNU-WIDER. His research is primarily empirical, with a focus on being policy relevant in a developing country context, especially within the area of firm dynamics and industrial policy. His research has therefore often been carried out in collaboration with national ministries and research institutions (e.g. Ghana, Mozambique, Myanmar, South Africa, Tanzania and Vietnam) but also with international organizations such as the UN, ILO and the World Bank.

Simon Roberts is an economics director at the UK's Competition and Markets Authority and a professor of economics at the University of Johannesburg where he founded the Centre for Competition, Regulation and Economic Development (CCRED). He has worked extensively and published on issues of industrial development, trade, regional value chains, competition and economic regulation in Southern and East Africa, advising governments, competition authorities and regulators. He has also testified as an expert witness in a number of major cases. Simon previously held the position of Chief Economist and Manager of the Policy & Research Division at the Competition Commission of South Africa from November 2006 to December 2012. Prior to this he was an associate professor at the University of Witwatersrand.
