SUMMARY

Mitchell Dean (PhD, UNSW, 1988) is a political and historical sociologist with an international research reputation and management and teaching experience across the social sciences and humanities in university and business school contexts.. He has held Professorships in Sociology at Macquarie University (Sydney) (2002-10) and the University of Newcastle (2010-14), and has been Professor of Public Governance since December 2012, and Head of the Department (2019-2025), at the Copenhagen Business School (CBS). He was Dean of the Division of Society, Culture, Media and Philosophy at Macquarie University in Sydney for seven years (2002-2009), where he was elected member of its governing board, the University Council (2009-10). He is the founding Head of Department of Business Humanities and Law at CBS (est. 2023).

Dean has many publications in leading international journals in Europe, the UK, Australia and North America, in sociology and other disciplines. He has authored or co-authored nine books and edited two others, including Governmentality: Power and Rule in Modern Society (Sage 2010, 2nd edition), cited in the first edition of Michel Foucault's lectures on the topic and the Oxford English Dictionary. He also co-edited the first national collection of studies of governmentality (Governing Australia. Studies in Contemporary Rationalities of Government, Cambridge University Press, 1998). Published in six languages, his books have been widely reviewed and highly cited. His latest authored book, The Last Man Takes LSD: Foucault and the End of Revolution (Verso 2021/2023, with Daniel Zamora here) has been profiled or reviewed in The Los Angeles Times, The New Statesman, The Spectator, Libération, Il Manifesto, Information (DK), Der Freitag (Germany), and elsewhere. It's research and indeed broader societal impact has thus been registered from major European countries to the UK, USA Argentina and Brazil.

Dean has disseminated his work across multiple countries, writing for broader publics including in The Guardian (UK), Domani (IT), The Los Angeles Review of Books, The Australian Financial Review, and the Telos Press, Verso and Stanford University Press blogs. He has broad experience with successful research supervision and examination, including seven completed PhDs as principal supervisor and eight as secondary or external. He has taught and led the development of sociological education at all levels. He has given keynotes, invited lectures and seminars at many leading universities in Europe, North America, the United Kingdom, Asia and Australia. He has over 27,000 citations on Google Scholar. He is an active member of the editorial advisory boards of both Economy and Society and Theory, Culture and Society.
